

Taft Summer Research Institutes

Taft Summer Research Institutes are week-long, non-credit bearing short courses in humanistic research methods open to all UC undergraduates, by application. Designed to build connections with faculty, graduate student, and community partner researchers, Taft Summer Research Institutes will prepare students to develop and pursue independent research projects. Each institute will offer a unique methodological and/or creative practice focus.

Accepted students must commit to attend all sessions and complete a post-institute survey. There is no cost to attend. Lunch will be provided each day.

Social Science in the Real World

May 5–9, 2025

Join the Taft Research Center and Department of Sociology for five days of workshops and hands-on activities to learn social science research methods. Expand your research horizons and professional networks while gaining experience working with different methods of data collection and analysis. Participants will receive a certificate of completion, digital voice recorder, and transcription software.

Open to all Cincinnati area undergraduates—all majors and levels of experience welcome!

Applications due April 11 by 5pm
